

He again offers sacrifices to the Lord--it is important that none of the glory come to him, the mere servant of God. As he pours out the blood of bulls and calves once again, a holy reverence sweeps over him afresh. He closes his eyes, drinking it in. But as he stands before the altar, he knows what he has to do. Slowly, he opens his eyes and turns to face the flock behind him. As he looks into each and every one of their faces, he is overwhelmed with compassion. They are Israel--Gods chosen people. And they need someone to lead them back to their Lord. In that moment, he commits himself anew. He will be their king--a shepherd who loves his sheep.
