Excerpt from The Essential Principle of Reform: An Address, Delivered Before the Alumni Association of Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, Pa., August 9th, 1865

Fellow Alumni of Pennsylvania College: Our times are marked by a peculiar emphasis in reformatory theory and effort. The stirring events of the last few years have added fresh impulse to the ardor with which the earnest mind of our country was before directed to the possibilities and means of a better condition of mans personal and social state. Our ears discern a sound of unusual velocity in the chariot-wheels of progress, as Providence is driving them over the crushed fruits of former evils. There is an eager endeavor to reconstruct and reform, and a general expectation that the movement of events is onward to worthier and happier developments of life and society than have yet been enjoyed. We cannot be indifferent to these things. Our contact with the thinking mind of the day, and much more, our obligation to bear a worthy part in every movement connected with the public good, oblige us to give them an earnest attention. It is our privilege and glory, to cast our influence in favor of the true and right in every question that concerns human welfare. These movements are not incipient, but the unfolding and ripening fruit of agitations and efforts in earlier times. They involve and recall the whole subject of moral and social reform. As it is not all gold that glitters, so it is not all reform that assumes that popular name. We must sift the true from the false, and discriminate the diamond from the dust.
