Not illustrated. 1868 Excerpt: ...had, And yet it passed unused. But God in light has come again, And comforts though He grieves; For happiness is born of pain To him who but believes. Through tangled thoughts thy mercy dear Shines with a richer grace; As skies are seen more sweetly clear Through boughs that interlace. LXXXVI. Shadows now are darker growing, But the friendly planet bright Momently is overflowing With a fuller, clearer light: See how mildly Every star confronts the night. BEAUTY. Sayst thou, Times are darker growing? In the darkness gather might; To the grateful traveller showing God hath set thee for a light: Mildly constant Shine, and help to rule the night. O, be steadier in thy duty; O, be brighter in thy zeal; O, be holier in thy beauty, When the earth most needs to feel What the Christian Can perform to bless and heal. LXXXVII. Spirit of beauty! thy presence confessing, God can we see in a sparkle of ore; Flowers and shells to our heart are expressing Love like its own, but transcendantly more. Spirit of beauty! each bough in its bending, Skies in their curve, and the sea in its swell, Streams as they wind, hills and plains in their blending, All, in our own, of Gods happiness tell. QUIET. 103 Spirit of beauty! thou soul of our Maker, Suddenly shown in a gleam or a tint; O, be each heart of thy joy a partaker; Love, and its store, are alike without stint. Spirit of beauty! thou teachest us sweetly; Prophets and psalmists yield holy delight: Show us our Lord, and we then shall completely Know thee as gentle, omnipotent might. Spirit of beauty! our offering we render, Thee in thy skyey dominion we praise; Lark-like we rise to the shadowless splendour, Pouring out song as the sun pours his rays. LXXXVIII.
